

Project 6 : Feature Story

Course Code & Course Name: MSJ3251 Mobile Journalism

Project Name: Feature Story on “Remembering Mawlana Bhasani : His daughter and Granddaughter share their Insights”

Project Description

For my Mobile Journalism course, I produced a feature story titled “Remembering Mawlana Bhasani: His Daughter and Granddaughter Share Their Insights.” The story explored the legacy of Mawlana Bhasani by combining archival accounts with exclusive family interviews. Using only my phone as a reporting tool, I interviewed Bhasani’s youngest daughter and two granddaughters. In the interviews, they shared personal reflections about Bhasani as both a leader and a family member. They spoke about his absence at home due to his lifelong dedication to the oppressed, yet expressed pride in his sacrifices and vision. While reminiscing, they also revealed untold stories that offered rare glimpses into his personal side. The project not only highlighted Bhasani’s historical importance but also showed how mobile journalism can capture intimate, human stories and preserve them for wider audiences.

Project Justification

Mobile phones have become the most accessible and easily handled tool for journalism today. With advanced cameras and digital tools built into a single device, they allow journalists to capture high-quality interviews, visuals, and stories on the go. For my feature story, I used my phone as the most powerful tool in my hand to document both archival narratives and intimate family reflections. The importance of this story lies in uncovering the untold personal side of Mawlana Bhasani, a leader who has often been intentionally pushed to the margins of official history. While political narratives sometimes try to forget him, his legacy continues through his lifelong service to the oppressed and in the memories of those who still hold him in their hearts. Sharing these family insights through mobile journalism not only preserves his story but also ensures that new generations can connect with his vision and sacrifices.

Learning Outcome :

Through this project, I learned how mobile phones can serve as the most practical and powerful tool for modern journalism. Using only my phone, I was able to record high-quality interviews, capture authentic moments, and produce a complete feature story. I also realized how mobile journalism makes storytelling more accessible, flexible, and immediate. Most importantly, I understood the value of giving space to voices and stories that are often ignored. By documenting the untold family memories of Mawlana Bhasani, I gained experience in blending history with personal narrative to create a deeper human connection. This taught me that mobile journalism is not just about convenience but also about opening doors to stories that need to be remembered and shared.
